

Anthropology

Summer School for Anthropologists and Social Scientists

General Information

The school is located on the Islet of Gozo (Malta) in the heart of the Mediterranean Sea. The program runs for 20 days, during three sessions in the summer of 2015. The five working days of the week will be reserved for fieldwork, fieldtrips and activities, as well as personalized discourse with academic experts. We aim for a staff-student ratio of one on two (with a maximum of 12 students per session).

Participation in this project provides participants with insight in the trade and craftsmanship of the anthropologist in the field. The project creates an intensive individual master-apprentice situation in which budding anthropologists can take the steps they need.

Our framework provides inspiration for your own fieldwork project and allows you to research topics of your interest with professional help whenever needed. Those willing will have their research guided by us towards a published research paper.

Goals

- Experience life as it is in the field.
- Design and execute your own research project.
- Get your (first?) research paper published.
- Learn to adapt to a new culture and climate.
- Gain insight from experienced, professional anthropologists.

- Learn through collaboration and discussion with fellow anthropologists.
- Make friends and network with an international community of researchers.

Course Description

The structure of the field school is one of open-ended pursuit of ethnographic study. For those students that desire more direction individual or group seminars are offered to place structure around your individual research project.

Directed at

The course is directed towards young anthropologists and cultural scientists. However, any individual who would like to learn about anthropological research and fieldwork is welcome to apply. Previous knowledge or experience is not required per se. We aim for a very tailor made program that can start at any level. Our tailor-made learning environment has proven useful for starters as well as Phd students, and even guided participants with topics well outside our traditionally socio-cultural focus.

Optional focuses

- Anthropology of Food
- Anthropology of Tourism
- Anthropology of Migration
- Photographical Techniques
